Research agreement between CEMOTEV and the New Caledonian Agronomic Institute. Based on the observation that New Caledonia's industrialization, via nickel, questions public policies, the CAI is carrying out a research program on the "sustainability of the development trajectory of New Caledonia". This research program sheds light on the governance and public action through macroeconomic tools and aims to contribute to the debates on the development strategies of New Caledonia, via an intergenerational analysis of the economic, environmental and social implications of different macroeconomic policy options.
